Dear Basel Committee,

I would like to contribute with a few comments regarding "Monitoring indicators for intraday liquidity management".

I noticed that patterns in the calendar year could be taken into account when assessing liquidity requirements. For instance, is the US Black Friday may pose significantly different liquidity requirements which could be anticipated by having information from previous years. Likewise, banks with an agricultural emphasis would take liquidity cycles into consideration.

This could be used in conjunction with the other proposed indicators in the consultative document.

I hope my comments are useful in some way.

Best regards,

Javier Gonzalez
