

Long series on US dollar bilateral nominal exchange rates – data documentation

Last updated 04 October 2023

The BIS nominal exchange rate data set contains USD exchange rates for the currencies of 192 economies at daily, monthly, quarterly and annual frequencies. These exchange rate series, which draw on central bank data as well as other sources, are used for the calculation of the BIS nominal and real effective exchange rate series and as an input to the BIS International Banking and Financial Statistics.

While several institutions publish time series on exchange rates (some with a country coverage similar to the one of the BIS), the BIS data set is unique in several respects. First, it combines current and historical data in a single data set with the highest possible level of consistency and comparability across countries. Second, the time series are available in multiple frequencies. The data can be downloaded and visualised conveniently using the various BIS statistical tools on the Bilateral exchange rates page in the BIS Data Portal. Finally, the BIS has benefited from the background information provided by the central banks on their time series (specific measure or collection time).

Daily data are available for approximately 80 economies. While the starting date of most daily series ranges from 1970 to 1995, series starting in the 1950s are available for 14 currencies. For lower frequencies, more historical data are available: the monthly, quarterly and annual series are substantially longer than the daily ones for several currencies. These time series are calculated as end-of-period figures or as averages over daily data, but extended backwards with the additional low-frequency historical data. Most monthly, quarterly and annual series start in 1957. The longest exchange rate series is for GBP/USD, for which monthly data are available starting in 1791.

For the most recent periods, daily data from the ECB is the main source, complemented with data from the US Federal Reserve. Exchange rates are measured at 13:15 GMT for the ECB data and 17:00 GMT for the Federal Reserve. Using data mainly from these institutions, each of which supplies data on a large number of currencies, maximises comparability across countries in terms of quotation time and market. Data are taken from other BIS member central banks for periods for which no data from the ECB or the Federal Reserve are available. The Deutsche Bundesbank is a key source for historical data. The International Monetary Fund's International Financial Statistics is another source for historical information, as it includes monthly and quarterly exchange rates for 190 economies going back to the 1950s. The documentation of the BIS data set provides detailed information on the sources used for each currency and time period.

Additional information

The ECB publishes exchange rates against the euro. The BIS series based on ECB data are calculated from the national currency/EUR and the EUR/USD cross rates. The Deutsche Bundesbank publishes historical exchange rates against the Deutsche Mark

(DEM). The BIS series based on Deutsche Bundesbank data are calculated from the national currency/DEM and the DEM/USD cross rates.

The exchange rates of the euro area legacy currencies are expressed in euro. For the period preceding the introduction of the euro, the legacy currency/USD exchange rate is divided by the fixed irrevocable euro conversion rate¹.

For the country specific information please see the table on the following pages.

Series may be downloaded, reproduced and disseminated as long as the appropriate national source is quoted and the BIS terms and conditions are observed.
